Annexure

The '10Attributes Assessment' is the overview derived from a situational and various life aspects questions with intent to help the recruiters in selecting the best-suited candidate available. The report should only be considered for a deeper understanding of the candidature and not as a full psychological test. Each attribute is explained below.

Confidence	Candidates who score high in confidence are generally good at social events, public speaking, team building and outgoing. They tend to have high leadership qualities and low social and work anxiety. Confidence is equally important in all professional domains.
Intelligence & Critical Thinking	This attribute shows a level of cognitive thinking. Scoring high in this should mean a candidate is good at aptitude and should be able to perform the critical thinking related tasks admirably. This aspect should be important in coding, architect, sales, negotiations, etc..
Intelligence & Critical Thinking	This attribute shows a level of cognitive thinking. Scoring high in this should mean a candidate is good at aptitude and should be able to perform the critical thinking related tasks admirably. This aspect should be important in coding, architect, sales, negotiations, etc..
Professional Integrity	The integrity stands for the quality of being honest and having strong moral principles. Applied in the professional world, higher integrity is the bottom line for all the leadership positions. The aspect is directly related to 'being trusted upon' and equally important in all professional domains.
Leadership	The ability to lead a team requires multiple viewpoints to a problem backed with self-confidence and higher integrity. This quality is important in all the individual contributor roles where taking ownership of one's work is required. Needless to say that all of the leadership positions would require the same across all professional domains.
Ambition	The drive that gets us through the day. Ambition is the driving force behind working hard to achieve a higher position or substantial professional growth. Higher scoring candidates are seen to be more serious about their work, prioritise it and tend to take challenges rather than settle for same day in day out jobs.
Details Oriented	The attribute suggests a presence of mind. Jobs like Lawyer, Architect, Engineer, Teacher, Doctor, etc, should prefer higher scores in the same.
Open-Mindedness	The wideviews of the world is much appreciated among many professional fields, indicating higher creativity, open to new ideas and not resilient to change professionally and personally in life.
Team Player	An ability to work and coordinate with people is important in a career profile itself because every role will require a share of team playing capabilities.
Efficiency & Productivity	An ability to get more work done per time is something which requires focus and general attitude of getting things done rather than procrastinating. This is a very important tool for professional and personal aspects of life.
Ability To Cope With Work Anxiety	Getting anxious in professional life is more obvious than we think. And thus, an ability to handle that mantally will require higher efficiency and an ability to see the big picture rather than drooling on the things that happened. Every profession will require some amount of the same.
